

The face of South Africa By Maré Mouton

Sometimes one sees a breathtaking landscape even whilst driving on an otherwise boring highway. This view from the N2 near Riversdale prompted us to find a place to pull off and walk back some distance to take photographs. A telephoto lens compressed the different layers of hills and mountains, resulting in an effect reminiscent of a Japanese watercolour – just another example of the beautiful scenery one drives through in South Africa!

